1) PROJECT INFORMATION

Field of expertise related to the topic: Martin-Luther-University of Halle-Wittenberg (German: Martin-Luther-Universität Halle-Wittenberg), also referred to as MLU, is a public, research-oriented university in the cities of Halle and Wittenberg in the German state Saxony-Anhalt, Germany.

MLU coordinates the joint research project "GenomELECTION" which compiles and answers socio-ethical, legal, and science communication related issues of modern methods of genome editing such as CRISPR/Cas9, TALENs, zinc finger nucleases, etc. relating to their meaning for both research and application. For this purpose, the joint research project consists of an ethical, legal, and a science communication subproject.

On the one hand, GenomELECTION works on the professional use of genome editing in basic research and in relation to possible practical applications in the areas of crop plant engineering and gene medicine. Here, amongst others the current meaning and further development of the precautionary principle play a crucial role for the successful translation of genome editing into routine practice in medicine and agronomy.

On the other hand, GenomELECTION is interested in the Citizen Science movement and the so-called "Do-It-Yourself Biology" (DIY-Bio), which wants to use or which already uses methods of biotechnology and methods of gene technology outside the professional laboratory environment. Since many legal questions in the area of Citizen Science and DIY-Bio are still unanswered, activities in these areas are also associated with legal pitfalls, which can lead even to criminal charges.

Potential contribution to the project: Helping to build a reliable legal and regulatory basis for citizens and their activities in the field of Citizen Science and DIY-Bio.
